

These days, there are many different ways of searching for the perfect job online. Websites can help you look for the job that fits you. Many Canadians use these resources to their advantage to help them land the perfect job. We created our list of our favourite five job search websites.

monster.ca

monster.ca is much more than just a job search. Monster helps you before, and after, you have found your job. They provide cover letter and resume examples, to ensure that your resume & cover letter will catch the attention of the employer. There are many articles on the site, including "Top 100 Interview Questions", which can help prepare you for your interview. Monster.ca features a basic, but detailed job search engine. You can search by job type, location, or both. The searching by location feature is helpful when you just want to see what is available around you.

workopolis.ca

Workopolis.ca is the perfect site to start your search for a new career. It allows you to sign in to the website, and save your searches and jobs postings. It offers an advanced search, with filters such as, only listing entry level positions, as well as a special search for students. Workopolis allows you to upload a copy of your resume and cover letter, and submit it online to the jobs you choose to apply to.

Service Canada Job Bank

The Service Canada Job Bank is run by The Government of Canada. Although the site offers a job search, it also gives links to important pages while searching for a new job. The job search offers a general search, as well as a search for students and youth. The job search is very detailed and gives you many options to narrow down your search. The government site offers information on employment insurance, frequently asked questions about getting a job, as well as an email alert when a job you desire become available.

Finding Your New Career Online

Written by Jesse
November 23, 2010

---

Job Boom

Job Boom is similar to monster.ca. Job Boom has more to offer than just a job search. You can search jobs through industry, location, or salary. Job Boom also has resources like survival guides for looking for a job, writing a resume, losing a job, and managing stress. The job search is very detailed and lists the important aspects of each job. Job Boom is a great site to start your job search.

indeed.com

Indeed offers a basic job search engine. The website allows you to search using only “what” and “where” when searching for different jobs. The website is very basic, but provides the required information on the job you wish to apply to.

Regardless of which website you choose, there are many online resources when it comes to online job searching. Each website offers different resources to use at your disposal, allowing you to find the quickest way to a new job or career.